【Notice】

1. In the case that the material(s) is reprinted by the applicant(s) regardless of the reprint destination and for profit or non-profit, it is not necessary to submit this document. The author(s) should write the copyright holder and the doi or the reference of original document.
2. “For-profit” means that the applicant(s) (or their organization) receives profits or rewards for publications, works, lectures, etc. containing the reprinted content. However, if the profit / reward received is equivalent to the actual cost offset related to publishing, it is considered non-profit.
3. It is not necessary to submit this application that does not require copyright permission due to copyright law exceptions such as face-to-face classes and remote simultaneous classes at universities, etc. Web lectures can be used without permission by a Japanese government order until March 31, 2021.
4. In the case that the material(s) will be used for commercial purposes, copyrighted works including reprinted parts can be compensated by donating them to the ECSJ. Or please see the Society's website for payment of compensation.
5. For publications of which copyright is held by the author with the Creative Commons License, the application is not required by the ECSJ. Please note that some articles are restricted for commercial use (NC is included in CC).

To Applicant(s)

The Electrochemical Society of Japan permitted the reprint use of the above application.

Applicants will be notified later if they pay compensation for commercial purposes.
